

Tue Dec 27, 2005

Trend alert: Binsi Labor and Birth Apparel

Category: Maternity

OK, I have to admit that, at first, I was skeptical—labor and birth apparel? Now that I'm wearing the Go Go top and the PrimaMama skirt, though, I understand. The top is the most comfortable piece of clothing that I've worn during my pregnancy (and I'm almost at the end, so we're talking at least eight months, here). And the skirt rocks, getting comfort points for cut, styling, and fabric. You can wear it under your belly or a bit higher, and fabric choices include a cozy cotton and lycra blend for the tops, and either cotton/spandex or cotton/rayon/spandex combos for the skirts. The skirt earns fashion points for its grosgrain ribbon tie, and the whole line for color choices, with fanciful names like "Cream Epiphany" and "Venus Lavender". Let's hear it for Carrie Grimditch, a labor doula, for designing the line, which includes three styles of skirt: the original design, the II Too skirt, and the PrimaMama, and two tops: the Thankini, a tank top with handy side snaps and front hooks, and the Go Go top, which looks like it could also be used as a nursing bra.

A great SheFindsMom fashion find at BirthinBinsi.com.

